FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Worksight Wins Grant to Benefit the New York City Alliance Against Sexual Assault

New York – The design studio Worksight is pleased to announce that they have been awarded a grant by Sappi Fine Paper's Ideas that Matter program. The grant will fund a print campaign benefiting a community outreach project by the New York City Alliance Against Sexual Assault. The alliance is the only organization in NYC to center its research, advocacy, training and community organizing on sexual violence.

Since its inception in 1999, Sappi's Ideas that Matter program has awarded over $1 million each year in grants and has attracted applications from designers throughout the world.

The Ideas that Matter program recognizes designers who have partnered with a philanthropic organization to develop proposals including campaign concepts, business plans, objectives, costs and possible benefits. Entries were judged by an independent review panel of top North American graphic designers and representatives from leading non-profit organizations including School of Visual Arts, Des Enfants, Inc., VSA Partners, Inc. and Adam & Co. All judges based their decisions on each proposal's creativity and potential effectiveness, and expressed confidence in the designers' vision.

"The Alliance needed printed vehicles to communicate their efforts, said Scott Santoro, Principal, Worksight. "We also wanted to present the Alliance in the most professional manner. The grant we received from Sappi will do just that."

"This year we received some exceptional and unique designs and campaigns that we know will bring energy and awareness to North America's most important causes," said Joe Isaak, Senior Consultant, Sales and Marketing, Sappi Fine Paper North America. "Ideas that Matter is a wonderful outlet for designers to use their passion and creativity to benefit the greater good, and Sappi is honored to be able to help share these powerful messages each year with audiences throughout North America."

The grants provide funding to designers and design companies for the development of printbased campaigns promoting causes of their choosing. Recipients donate their time and creativity to each project, while the funding covers implementation costs.

The deadline for the 2008 Ideas that Matter grant submissions is May 31, 2008. For more information on Sappi's North American Ideas that Matter program, please visit www.sappi. com/ideasthatmatter.

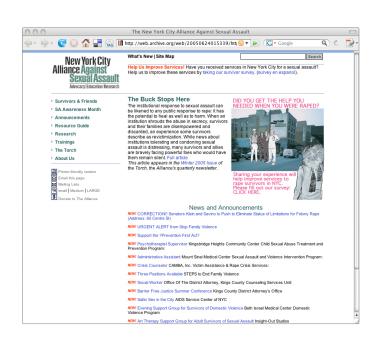

About Sappi Ideas that Matter

Since its inception, the program has funded more than 100 campaigns in North America, and awarded more than $7 million in grants worldwide. Ideas that Matter attracts applications from designers throughout the world. This year, Sappi received more than 100 applications from North American designers, and awarded 13 grants ranging from $5,000 to $50,000. The grants will be used to develop campaigns for non-profit organizations backing cultural, health, and human rights efforts, as well as supporting the homeless, underprivileged and disabled.

In the event that a relative, friend or someone you know discloses that they have experienced sexual violence, the most important things you can do are:

- Listen: Don't just use your ears—use your eyes, face and body to show that you are listening.
- ► Validate: Do not question the survivor's story and do not blame them for what happened.
 - Provide information about services that can help the survivor make a decision for him/herself as to what he/she should do.

A NEWSLETTER FOR THE ANTI-SEXUAL VIOLENCE COMMUNITY • SUMMER 2005 ISSUE

Boys will be Men: The Pause Button Campaign

The Alliance created the Pause Button campaign to assist in preventing secual violence by reducing perpertation. Its goal is to change attitudes among boys II to 13 years old that could contribute to sexual assault perpertation as boys mature. The campaign aims to reinforce boys positive masculairty, respect boys own moral compasses, and show boys how to not cross the line and sexually assuit a peer.

When tallang to boys about sexual assault; is best to provide a positive message about masculinity, one that reinforces the boys own morality and puts them in control of their actions. While boys generally believe that violence toward girls is unacceptable even reprehensible behavior, they do not necessarily make a clear connection between violence and sexual assault. We have to make that message clear, sexual assault was a control of the control of th

At the same time, punitive messages about the future consequences of their behavior are not as effective for boys. This is largely because adolescents view their future and adulthood in a very distanced, abstract way. While they are aware that their current behaviors might affect their lives down the road (high school, college and beyond), their acute sense of the future usually does not extend beyond anticipation for tomorrows again or the party on Saturday injoy.

After a long, careful development process working with experts in teen and 'tween' research and marketing, the Pause Button

Campaign is the best poster we've seen for this audience. The final poster was designed by Craig Yoe and Yoel Studio. Craig is the former Creative Director and VPiCeneral Manager of the Muppers, and has worked on everything from IV shows to theme parks. The team at Yoel are experts in crafting effective messages that young people notice and identify with.

Focus-testing found that boys clearly recognized that this poster was intended for them, and that if they came across an ad like this, no matter the location, they would stop and check it out. All boys immediately and readily understood the message. As a 9th grade boy participating in a focus group said: 'It's not a game. You get points in playing games, but you don't get points for rape.'

The Alliance determined that a toollist for program staff was needed in order to encourage buy in for the campaign, assist with proper implementation, and help safeguard against any negative effects. The toolkir also guides and encourages youth workers, generates additional activities, and points to outside materials. It offers advice on what to do if a survivor or an abuser comes forward, and how to talk to a group of young people about sexual violence. A crucial part of the toolkir is "Myths and Facts' section that can be used in a classroom discussion, and also serves to educate staff.

To inform our future work, the Pause Button campaign distribution is integrated with an evaluative research study to ascertain its efficacy, in 25 after-school and beacon programs. This will help the Alliance evaluate the poster campaign's effect on adolescents social norms around sexual violence; their preparedness to deal with the issue; and their response to the poster.

The evaluation is being conducted by The Michael Cohen Group (MCG), the Alliance's research partner throughout the development of this campaign. MCG is a research-based consulting firm with a strong specialization in research with youth and children, and a particular focus in researching educational and media products and programs for children.

NYCAGAINSTRAPE.ORG A NEWSLETTER FOR THE ANTI-SEXUAL VIOLENCE COMMUNITY SUMMER 2007

→ In April the Alliance released its groundbreaking findings on hospital services for sexual assault victims. Our research provides the most comprehensive data to date on such services, as well as the first citywide report from survivors themselves. Here are highlights from the press conference covered by the New York Daily News and two television channels, among others.

On the Findings: Alliance Executive Director Harriet Lessel

"Our research found that for rape victims, getting help in New York City depends on two factors: misfortune and luck. Misfortune because what services you get depend on where the rape happened. And luck because if you are lucky, you might go to a hospital with specialized treatment.

On the Data: Research Director Deborah Fry

"It is alarming to note that a sexual assault victim who is brought to 75% of the hospitals in New York City will go without specialized care. Currently, there are only 17 emergency departments in NYC that have SAFE programs. Most of these are located in Manhattan."

On the Implications: Education and Training Director Tamara Pollak

"We know that it doesn't make sense logistically to try to develop a SAFE program in every hospital in New York City. It does make sense to planfully design a SAFE program infrastructure that guarantees access to all victims."

ALLIANCE NEWS

The Alliance's community library of sexual violencerelated resources includes a growing collection of commercial films. Of note are two recent acquisitions: Searching for Angela Shelton and sherrybaby.

The Alliance showcased Searching for Angela Shelton last year at its film festival for rape crisis advocates, Films that Fight Back. This biographic documentary follows the director, a victim of childhood sexual abuse, as she searches the country for her namesakes. In the course of her journey, she discovers that most of them have also suffered from sexual violence. The film succeeds through its deeply personal approach to a social problem.

sherrybaby takes an unflinching look at the devastation wreaked by childhood sexual abuse in one womans life. Maggie Gyllenhaal's performance earned her a Golden Globe nomination. As the New York Times noted: "She treats the character neither as a case study nor as an opportunity to show off her range, but rather as a completely ordinary and therefore arrestingly complicated person."

The library is open to the public during the week; library loans are also available. Please contact the Alliance for further information, or email: library@nycagainstrape.org

→ In the last year, the Alliance has benefited from two special film screenings. In October, Gyllenhaal made a personal appearance for a Q&A with the audience following a VIP viewing of sherrybaby. In April, writer/director Mia Goldman and Shirley Jackson fielded questions about their film, Open Window, along with Alliance Research Director Debi Fry, and Carole Sher, Victim Services Coordinator at Beth Israel Medical Center.

Open Window portrays how an entire family struggles with the victim toward recovery after a stranger rape. Actress Robin Tunney won best actress in the Boston Film Festival for her performance.

→ The Alliance received a grant from the New York Community Trust for a new Health Policy and Administration Associate. We welcome Siri Suh, who will spearhead strategy around our SAFE in the City goals to ensure access to best care for all survivors in New York City. Prior to joining us, Siri worked on an international project to promote family planning and maternal heath in Senegal.

We also introduce our new Research Associate, Monica Paz. In her first project, Monica will conduct focus groups

In addition to her community organizing work in New York, Monica served as a lawyer on the team that won the first national torture case to reach the supreme court in Peru. Monica replaces Daisy Deomampo, who will pursue her doctorate in Anthropology. Daisy will be sorely missed.

→ In April, the Alliance organized Uncovering Rape in NYC, a full-day workshop for local media. Funded by the NY State Division of Criminal Justice Services, the series of panel discussions was moderated by the prestigious Poynter Institute of Journalism.

Seasoned journalists offered insight on the practical and ethical challenges to victim-centered coverage. Panelists included Helen Benedict, the author of Virgin or Vamp:

How the Press Covers Sex Crimes; Alison Gendar, Police Bureau Chief for The NY Daily News; Linnell Smith, an award-winning Baltimore Sun reporter; Dominic Carter, a survivor and anchor for NY I news; and Carol Jenkins, former anchor for NBC News.

- In May, the NYPD Special Victims Liaison Unit named Sgt. Grace O'Donnell as its new Commanding Officer. Sgt. O'Donnell served as Supervisor in the Brooklyn Special Victims Squad. She replaces Lt. Stephanie Clark, who was a strong ally of the rape crisis community. Sgt. O'Donnell will continue working in Brooklyn: the NYPD Unit was recently relocated to 300 Gold Street.
- Local rape crisis programs are thinking creatively about their new primary prevention mandate from the Centers for Disease Control. To support them, the Alliance initiated a four-part training program on primary prevention funded by the NY State Department of Health.

In part one, Lydia Guy, the Prevention Services Director for the Washington Coalition of Sexual Assault Programs, described how a community development approach could work for them. In the second, Lisa Fujie Parks, co-author of The Spectrum of Violence Prevention: Toward a Community Solution, guided them through the six levels of the "spectrum of prevention," and discussed each local program's readiness to embark on primary prevention planning.

In the remaining two workshops, the programs will begin to map out their efforts to create a citywide strategy of primary prevention.

For young women alone, reports jumped from 5.4 to 9.5 percent. According to this data, nearly 1 in 10 young women attending NYC public high schools have been raped.

June • 2008 Partners and Peers: Sexual and Dating Violence Among NYC Youth A Research Report by the New York City Alliance Against Sexual Assault and the Columbia Center for Youth Violence Prevention, Columbia University

The Social Ecological Model

Individuals are influenced by their environments, and at the same time, an environment is shaped by its individuals. The social ecological model developed by Urie Bronfenbrenner in the 1970s emphasizes this constant interaction between individuals, the environment, and the layers in between. This model can also be applied to understand the factors important in sexual violence prevention.

Individual-level influences are biological, and include personal history factors that increase the likelihood that an individual will become a victim or perpetrator of violence. For example, hostility toward women, childhood history of sexual abuse, or witnessing family violence (among other factors) may influence an individual's behavior choices that lead to perpetration of sexual violence (CDC, 2004).

Relationship and group-level influences are factors that increase risk as a result of relationships with peers, intimate partners, and family members (CDC, 2004). Research has shown that social norms upheld by friends, family, and partners influence behavior (Fujie-Parks, Cohen, and Krayitz-Wirtz, 2007).

Community-level influences are factors that increase risk, based on social environments, and include an individual's experiences and relationships with schools, workplaces, and neighborhoods.

Societal-level influences are larger, macro-level factors that influence sexual violence, such as gender inequality, religious or cultural belief systems, societal norms, and economic or social policies that create or sustain gaps and tensions between qroups of people (DCC, 2004).

Interactions can occur within a particular system or across systems. Most often, these interactions occur in a top-down matter; environment influences individual behavior. Yet, interactions can also occur in the opposite direction. Individuals can be instrumental in forming alliances or coalitions to enact change within their community and/or society. Furthermore, other factors, such as technology, can move in both directions.

The social ecological model allows one to examine various factors that explain individual behavior, and calls for prevention strategies that include activities affecting and targeting multiple levels of this model.

as awareness-raising campaigns, will need to be made to improve the level of readiness. If a community is at a mid- or high level of readiness, then that community can begin designing an action agenda. All prevention work begins with community-based readiness assessment.

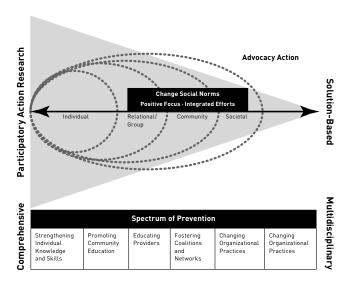

- Solution-Based and Positively Focused: The Alliance envisions a city without sexual and dating violence. Prevention work is grounded in promoting a positive set of behaviors through the creation of environments and norms that promote those behaviors, instead of focusing solely on eliminating negative behavior. The outcome of this prevention work is seen as building healthy behaviors and communities. The Alliance understands the importance of working with communities to clearly define what the term healthy means.
- Integrated and Collaborative: Many social movements are focused on changing social norms and behaviors. The norms that allow sexual and dating violence to continue in NYC also allow for other unhealthy behaviors and norms [such as behaviors that lead to HIV transmission, general violence, bullying, hate crimes, etc.]. Instead of creating separate prevention movements, the City should work together to comprehensively change the social norms that affect these behaviors. The Alliance believes in working across sectors, and using—as well as sharing—best practices and knowledge with allies in other movements.

Programmatic Recommendations

This study provides data to inform prevention programming. Based on this data, the Alliance recommends that:

- Schools and programs that work with youth should include a focus on primary prevention. Primary prevention focuses on examining and addressing the root causes of violence such that violence can end before it occurs.
- Prevention efforts should work with and develop youth leaders as an impetus for change. Since youth often turn to friends in times of crisis, it is important to develop leadership among youth to address the root causes of sexual and dating violence and challenge accepted peer norms. The Alliance's Youth Action Council is one example of building youth leadership (see text box: Youth Action Council on page 70).

- Prevention efforts should include a strong focus on changing social norms. This can happen by focusing prevention efforts at the community level, such as schools and peer networks. By focusing on changing community norms, the underlying factors that influence violent behaviors can be changed.
- Prevention programming must include the term "sexual violence" in the definition of "dating violence," and vice versa. This research shows that sexual violence is a component of dating violence. Many dating violence prevention efforts only address physical violence, but these efforts will not end dating violence if they fail to address a key component of dating violence—sexual violence. The sexual and dating violence prevention movements should work together to ensure comprehensive dating violence prevention efforts.

 Prevention efforts should be integrated and collaborative with other health efforts. This study shows the impact of dating violence on the health of young people. Often health programs such as those that seek to reduce teenage pregnancy, HIV transmission, and others are seeking to address the same social norms as the dating violence prevention programming. Working together ensures comprehensive prevention programs for youth.

About the New York City Alliance Against Sexual Assault

The New York City Alliance Against Sexual Assault plays a unique role in New York City. We serve all five boroughs, and work closely with the rape crisis programs and hospitals, District Attorney Offices, New York Police Department, court officials and city leaders to develop and implement best practices and policies in the treatment of and response to sexual assault survivors. The Alliance is at the forefront of sexual violence intervention and prevention, and has garnered national attention for model strategies and programs in New York City. The Alliance's SAFE Training Institute [SAFETI] is the largest sexual assault forensic examiner training program of Emergency Department and medical professionals in New York State.

The Alliance has been designated by the NYS Department of Health (NYS DOH) as one of two "Centers of Excellence for primary prevention of sexual assault" in New York State. We are working with the NYS DOH and the New York State Coalition Against Sexual Assault (NYSCASA) to develop, implement and monitor best-practice policies and guidelines regarding survivor service delivery in New York City and statewide.

Project ENVISION

A CITY WITHOUT SEXUAL VIOLENCE: COMMUNITY RESEARCH

In 2009, the Alliance, in conjunction with community stakeholders, conducted action-research on sexual violence prevention in three communities. In Williamsburg, Brooklyn, a community coalition comprised of local service providers, rape crisis advocates, parents, educators and activists, are using the data to develop effective solutions for preventing sexual violence in their community.

Sexual violence is any completed or attempted sexual act against a person's will or against a person unable to give consent. Sexual violence encompasses a continuum of acts, ranging from unwanted sexual comments or advances to completed rape.

Sexual violence is a public health problem and a human rights issue that can be prevented.
